This photo may have been taken when BC Kongō navigated from the builder's yard to Belfast to enter the great dock there for cleaning and painting her bottom in preparation of the trials. The high rectangular-shaped container on both sides between #3 and #4 main gun turrets were used for metering the circulation of the boiler water and the supply of good quality pure water and mounted, of course, only for trials. This method was taken up by the IJN and applied until the trials of Ise and Hyūga. [Photo: Courtesy of Kure Maritime Museum].

A very clear almost 100% view of BC Kongō as she appeared in 1914. She is anchored in Yokosuka naval port with #2 main gun turret turned to port and #3 turret turned to starboard. Her paint has changed from the dark grey to a very light one, but the main mast and support struts of the tripod masts are still dark. When Japan declared war upon Germany on 23 Aug 1914, she was the flagship of 1F 3S (First Fleet (Kantai), Third (Division) Sentai).

Perspective view (rear side) of BB Hiei's foremast in 1941.

Midship of BC Haruna in 1928 (upper) after the first modernisation conversion and 1934 after the second one. Pay attention to the reversion of the height of the funnels beside of noting the complete revisions of foremast and after superstructure.

NOTE: BB Haruna was the only one of Kongō class that 'survived' the war but sitting at the bottom of sea near to Kure after the heavy carrier-based B-29 attacks in Jul 1945. Readers interested in this ship can find a series of full page photos showing her condition when inspected by British navy personnel and under air attack in Vol. 1 of World War II magazine.
